PERSONAL STAFF LONG ON THE JOB

Few Amateurs or Eggheads
Stand High in Councils of Vice President

By WILLIAM M. BLAIR

Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, July 27—In the creation of their political campaign structures, Vice President Nixon and Senator John F. Kennedy have more in common than meets the public eye.

Their organizations are almost wholly personal. They are made up of people who have known the candidates for years.

Harold E. Stassen, like a spoiled child and told him to get off his "Nixon" horse. Mr. Stassen got off.

Mr. Nixon decides to name his campaign manager his choice will be Mr. Hall, although Len Hall observed recently the title would not mean much "because Dick is his own manager, and makes his own decisions."

Mr. Hall, who served in the New York Assembly and twelve years in the House of Representatives before his defeat in 1952, was named Republican National Chairman in 1952 after helping to mastermind the first Eisenhower campaign. His relationship with Mr. Nixon is illustrated by a line from the biography put out recently by the Nixon office. His [Hall's] was the principal voice that persuaded me to run again in 1952.

Mr. Stassen to create a Nixon organization in 1960, organized in December, 1958. Acting as a steady hand, he told Nixon, "I am not sure that some of the things that President Eisenhower is trying to undercut are not worth it."

Mr. Stassen, a long-time friend, John Edgar Hoover, then American ambassador to Belgium and former director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Committee. Mr. Folger flew home for a conference with Mr. Hall and the Vice President. They agreed that Mr. Hall would start to visit the country. Mr. Folger, who had started shaking the funds. He had raised $100,000 in 1956 with the first "Nixon" dinners.

Mr. Folger is a 64-year-old

Another reporter and writer, James R. Shepley of Port Washington, L. I., is a campaign assistant in charge of research and ideas. He is on leave as chief of the United States and Canadian news service for Time magazine.

Little is heard of Charles K. McWhorter, who is a younger edition of Len Hall, bald head to joviality included. He performs a major function as leg-

Professor of Political Science at Notre Dame University; Dr. George Grasmuck, Professor of Political Science at the University of Michigan, and Stanley E. McCaffrey of Berkeley, Calif., a former vice president of the University of California and a boyhood friend of Mr. Nixon. Dr. Grasmuck was Mr. Nixon's chief liaison man with the Platform Committee.

This group also includes, on an "as needed" basis, Dr. William Y. Elliott, Professor of Government at Harvard University, who accompanied Mr. Nixon to Russia last year; Lon L. Fuller, a member of the Harvard Law School faculty, who taught Mr. Nixon at Duke University twenty-five years ago, and the Rev. John F. Cronin, an economics and philosophy teacher now on the staff of the National Welfare Conference in Washington.

Planning television and radio are two experienced producers, Edward A. Rogers and Everett Hart. They have campaigned with Mr. Nixon before. Mr. Hart has his own company in California. He first advised Mr. Nixon on television in the Senate campaign of 1948. Heading the advance men for Mr. Nixon's trip is Robert Haldeman, a 33-year-old New York advertising man.

The lone woman with a special place in the Vice President's organization, personal and campaign, is attractive, red-haired Rose Mary Woods. She probably keeps more secrets than anyone in the Nixon hierarchy. "I know of no one more efficient or loyal," the Vice President has said of this 41-year-old confidential secretary, who has an inspired loyalty above a professional one.
